KSA is Your Soybean Advocate in Topeka

KSA is the voice of approximately 600 Kansas soybean producers that are members of the Association. By making the choice to become a member of KSA, you make that collective voice in Topeka even more powerful.

KSA is your soybean advocate in Topeka on issues like biodiesel legislation, animal agriculture, biotechnology, and farming practices. This important policy work is paid for by your voluntary membership in KSA, and cannot come from checkoff dollars.

KSA testifies before state legislative committees, lobbies state legislators and the administration, provides written and verbal comments on key issues, helps develop key legislative language on soybean initiatives, and relays information about the importance of KSA issues to the media.

KSA's commitment to policy development begins with the grower-members through our policy session at our annual meeting and through the hard work of the board of directors. Farmers elect state board members and voting delegates then who establish the policy goals for ASA.

For more than 35 years, KSA has been working on behalf of its members to build demand, enhance profit opportunities, and protect the Kansas soybean industry. KSA is proud to represent its soybean grower members.

KSA board member leaders make two trips to Washington each year in cooperation with ASA to talk with our US Senators and Representatives about issues vital to Kansas soybean farmers.

ASA & KSA are Your Advocates in Washington

The American Soybean Association (ASA) is the collective voice of 25,000 U.S. soybean producers that are members of the Association. By making the choice to become a member of ASA you make that collective voice even more powerful.

ASA is your advocate in Washington D.C., on issues like biodiesel legislation, the Farm Bill, transportation infrastructure, and market access. This important policy work is paid for by your voluntary membership in ASA, and cannot come from checkoff dollars.

As your number one advocate, ASA testifies before Congress, lobbies Congress and the Administration, provides written comments on key issues, helps develop key legislative language on soybean initiatives and relays information about the importance of ASA issues to the media.

ASA's commitment to policy development begins with the grower-members. They elect state Board members, and voting delegates who establish the policy goals for ASA.

For over 90 years, ASA has been working on behalf of its members to build demand, enhance profit opportunities, and protect the soybean industry. ASA is proud to represent its soybean grower members, and is looking forward to another 90 years of success.
